As its title suggests, this book is aimed at the non-accounting student. It is less technical than many accounting books on the market and assumes no prior knowledge of the subject. Finance and Accounting for Non-Specialists delivers an appropriate mix of financial accounting, management accounting, and finance, so that students develop an understanding of the basic principles of these three areas and how they interrelate. It allows students to interpret and apply financial information in the management of financial resources, without going into the technical detail of how to prepare it.
